Reflection by Richard Klein

As we head into a busy Fall season, I thought I'd write a brief commentary on the quality that underlies the teamwork we value so highly at Udyat, namely, trust. Customers have many options when purchasing their furniture. By the time they have chosen one of our client partners, they have demonstrated a level of trust that the retailer will provide a quality product at the agreed upon price. Once this has been accomplished, part of that responsibility is transferred to us as warehousing and delivery service providers. Our client is trusting that we will provide a quality service and represent their brand in the best manner possible. How we manage this act of trust can either cause damage to the client's brand, or create a repeat customer, further strengthening our bond. Our teams have placed their trust in Udyat as an employer of excellence, whose promises are kept. Udyat in turn trusts that our teams will be consummate professionals, upholding our company's values in all that we do. I'd invite us all to consider this circle of trust and to reflect upon how vital it is that each of us do his part so that the circle remains unbroken.
