ABOUT PORCELAIN PAINTING

Porcelain Painting requires the application of china paint onto a plain white piece of porcelain (china blank). To do this, powdered china paints are mixed and applied with an oil medium. It is then fired in a kiln to a very high temperature (1200F to 1600F). The paint is absorbed by the porcelain during the firing, making the painting permanent. As China Paint is a semi-transparent paint, it requires several fires to reach the desired depth of colour and detail. Other techniques can be used to enhance the porcelain such as applying lustres or 22KT gold. These are also fired in the kiln. The above are the same methods as used by the Porcelain Companies in Europe that produce fine handpainted items (e.g Royal Doulton & Royal Crown Derby).

Any of the Artists at the show will be pleased to answer your questions.
