STONEWARE
Actual historical headlines, reads and dates captured for posterity in stoneware clay.

Newsprints are made from two types of mud mixed near Medicine Hat, Alberta. The final newspaper effect is accomplished in a series of steps, including two kiln firings. Engraved clay is applied to the wet pot and the piece is placed in a humidity controlled cabinet for five to eight days to dry. It then enters a kiln firing at 1630 F (890 C), after which it is hand rubbed with stain to produce the artistic newspaper effect.

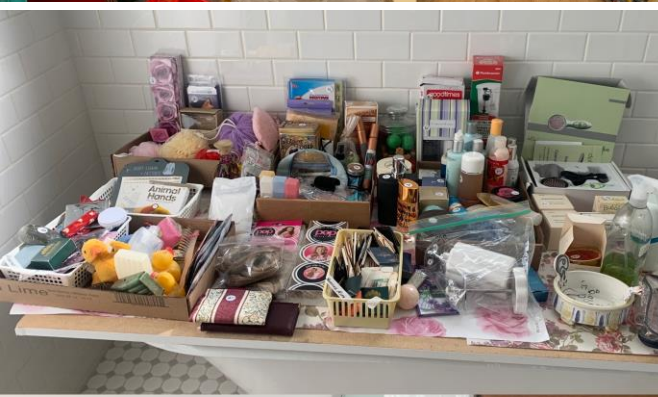

• Next, the inside of the pot is glazed and it is returned to the kiln for the final firing where it reaches a temperature of 2300 F (1260 C). The result is a unique conversation piece for your home, office, or useful for the display of floral arrangements. The attractive newsprint, wall plaques and humorous newsprint are made by a similar process. However, since these are not glazed, it is recommended that they are used for dried floral arrangements only. All items are individually designed and hand decorated, no two pieces are alike.
